To the friends of Temperance and the public generally we now make our appeal in behalf of this paper. The publisher feeling it a matter of importance to the interest of the Temperance cause in the District, as well as the general interest of the cause, and having been, as he conceives, Providentially placed in a situation at this time when he can mingle this interest with that of the business men, and thereby render a double service to the community, and still further open a medium of communication by which our principles may be extended far and wide, at a cheap rate, he has purchased a printing establishment, so as not only to be able to put a daily paper regularly to press, but also a weekly; and still further, be able to do any other printing the public may be pleased to have done; and he assures them that they shall have no cause of complaint. He has made arrangements by which he can devote his time to the interest of the office and the paper; and, having employed Mr. Charles W.
Fenton, who will be always on the spot, to conduct the printing, he has no doubt but that general satisfaction will be given. We shall make arrangements to have the earliest news; also the proceedings of Congress.

We wish all who are indebted for the paper up to this time to pay up, as the affairs of the tri-weekly must be closed. They will perceive that we are about to give them a better paper, double the number, at the same price.

While the "COLUMBIAN FOUNTAIN" will be devoted to the cause of Temperance, its columns will be enriched by original articles on subjects calculated to interest, instruct, and benefit its readers. It is intended so to blend variety, amusement, and instruction, as that the various tastes of its patrons may be (as far as it is practicable) gratified.
Commerce, Literature, and Science, and every other subject of interest, not inconsistent with Temperance and morality, will receive the earnest attention of the publisher.
Nothing of a sectarian, political, or personal character will be admitted.

POETRY.

Its words
Are few, but deep and solemn, and they break Fresh from the fount of feeling.—Perceval.

The following lines were written by a plain laboring man expressly for the recent May Festival of the St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum School, and were presented to the Sisters of Charity as a slight evidence of his grateful appreciation of the careful attention they bestow upon the instruction of his children.

Delightful May! Now God is known, Nature does make him shine!
And dressed in roses, our Young Queen Appears almost divine.

Whilst we attend this lovely maid, Who shines in nature's dress, And flowery crowns adorn her head And innocence her breast,

May thanks and praise to God ascend, From all assembled here;
And innocence our joys attend,
And in our Queen appear.

Let us implore God's blessing now, To rest on SISTERS DEAR!
Whose loving care has taught us how We should this day appear.

When we in songs of praise unite,
And flowers bestrew our way;
May love and joy shine in us bright, And crown our Queen of May.

Our songs and joyful feastings shall Be innocent this day;
Whilst love and concord in us dwell—This is our Queen of May!

These virtues will give us true fame, When roses shall decay;
These will continue our good name, Beyond the month of May!

When we shall sink into the grave, As thousands will this day!
Virtue will cause our fame to live,
When we have done with May!!
May, 1846. REEVES.

is but half the work. Let them be made virtuous and religious, or you leave them more exposed to danger than they were before."

THE WHITE COTTAGE.

A TEMPERANCE STORY.

BY RE VERA.

"I hope you are not hurt, my little fellow," said a gentleman to a little boy, apparently six or eight years old, whom he assisted to rise from the pavement. "I did not see you in time to prevent the collision."

"I am not hurt, sir, but I have broken my jug in the fall, and all the liquor is spilled. My father will be very angry, for he gave me the last levy he had, and told me to buy him a quart of New England rum—but it can't be helped. I wish there was no liquor in the world."

"Amen to that wish, my lad, with all my heart. But why do you wish so?"

"Because my father, who is a good kind man, when he is sober, and works hard to support mother, my little sister, and me, could not then get it to drink, and we would always have enough to eat, and we should be so happy—but," and the lad burst into tears—"I am afraid to go home—he will be so angry when he knows I have broken the jug and spilled the liquor."

"Where does your father live?"

"In the white cottage at the end of School House Lane."

"What is your name, my boy?"

"Ben-jon, sir, Charles Benson."

"Well, as I have been the cause of your misfortune, I will pay for the broken jug—the liquor I cannot pay for. Listen to me.
Here is fifty cents—go home and tell your father the misfortune you have met with—that the gentleman who caused it, paid for the jug, but could not, conscientiously, pay for the liquor—if he asks you the gentleman's name, tell him he is a Son of Temperance, and, as such, it is his duty to discountenance the use of any thing that can intoxicate. Will you do this?"

"Yes, sir—would that father was a Son of Temperance. Oh, sir, if you would speak to him, perhaps"—and the big tears rolled down his cheeks—the stranger was moved.
"I will speak to him, my boy—depend upon me. There, run home now—be a good boy, and we will see what can be done for your father."

Noble little fellow, soliloquised the stranger—yes, I will see this Benson, and if entreaty and persuasion can aught avail, he shall be saved from the curse of intemperance. Insatiate fiend! I will snatch this victim from thy grasp—Heaven aiding me, and place him beyond the reach of the seducing influence. Fell monster—thy time is short! Soon will the gilded places reared to the honor of this Moloch be dismantled—my countrymen are becoming sensible of the danger they incur from the presence of this destructive agent among them, and soon they will pass sentence of banishment against the foul destroyer of their peace. May the time soon come, when not a distillery shall rear its filthy walls toward Heaven—when the stench of distillation shall no more be known in the land, and alcohol be ranked, and take its place among the deadly poisons, upon the shelf of the apothecary. These thoughts passed rapidly through the mind of the stranger, as he passed onward to his dwelling. Elated with the prospect of doing good—glorying in the cause of temperance—the thought of his being instrumental in saving one more fellow creature from the drunkard's doom—of restoring him to his family—of making that family happy, of bringing them around the family altar, and of listening to thanksgivings and praise to Heaven from grateful hearts—these thoughts buoyed him up—and with elastic step he passed along to his residence, where, for the present, we will leave him, and follow Charles Benson to the home of his father.

CHAPTER II.

THE WHITE COTTAGE.

The residence of Charles Benson, sen., was in a pleasant street, or lane, as it was called, in which was located the Academy of the town of T—. It was a neat two story frame building, white as the driven snow, with green window blinds, and a small yard in front, in which were growing various flowers—shrubs and trees, tastefully arranged, and which, added to the cleanly appearance of the building itself, made it pleasant to look upon. It was obvious to the beholder that the cultivator of this little plot was no novice in the school of Flora. But let us walk in.

That little girl who is seated at her mother's feet is Clara Benson. She is listening to a conversation between her father and mother; and there, in the middle of the floor, stands our young acquaintance, Charles Benson, jr.

"You know, Charles, you promised me you would never drink again. It is unworthy of you. Why will you not leave off a practice which causes you and all of us so much sorrow and shame. Have the resolution to say no, and all is well." I was afraid, when you went out with James Grandison, that he would induce you to drink. That man will do you no good.
Intemperate himself, he delights to overcome the scruples of others, and tempt them to their shame."

"Cease, Clara, I feel all, and more than you can say on this subject. I have been drinking—the thirst for more is strong upon me, and I verily believe I shall go mad unless I get it. You young scamp, who did you say ran against you and caused you to break the jug and spill the liquor?"
"I could not help it, father. He said he was a 'Son of Temperance,' and as such was bound to discourage the use of every thing that can intoxicate."

"Why, you rascal, you have got it by heart. Come here—answer me—are you ashamed of your father?"

"Father, you know I love you; but when your eye glens as now it does, and you tremble so, you frighten me."

"Wife, what shall I do? I fell as though I were going mad. Liquor I must and will have. I cannot now promise any thing, wife—do not ask me. I do not deserve your confidence—would I were dead!"
